I was one of six children. I have two younger brothers and 1 elder sisters. My father was not a 2 man and we live in a small house, so at home there was little 3. 4 I consider that I was extremely 5. The house was on the outskirts of a small town. Meadows, woods, and even a friendly stream lay within walking distance of our home. My mother and father were far too busy to occupy 6 with my affairs, so the greater part of my upbringing was left to my sisters. If I am now a comparatively calm and placid person, able to cope tolerably well with those problems that life always presents us with, it is, I firmly believe, due to the fact that I was allowed to grow up without too much fuss 7 made of me.

The most dreadful fate that I can imagine would be that of growing up as 8. All mothers and fathers experiment on their unfortunate first-born. They read the latest baby books. They attend clinics and courses of lectures. They even listen to the advice of unmarried aunts. They worry about the little person's digestion. They 9 the exact moment to present him or her with solid food. In short, 10.

We have studied more than 125,000 leaders. We've analyzed their styles, decisions, and actions and the hard and soft outcomes that result. We discovered that the two most important differentiating factors in separating exceptional from average leaders are Challenge and Connection. Connection is the strength of the emotional connection a leader builds with his or her people. Challenge is the extent to which a leader pushes his or her folks. Two of the most important decisions you have to make as a leader are how much you want to challenge your folks to push their limits and how tight an emotional bound you want to build with them. The decisions you make on these two issues will determine exactly what kind of leader you're going to be. If you push people but you don't seem to care about them, you're not going to be very successful. But if you care enough about your folks to push them beyond what even they think they're capable of, you will succeed.
